Gender Decoder:

In this paper the researchers showed job adverts which included different kinds of gender-coded language to men and women and recorded how appealing the jobs seemed and how much the participants felt that they 'belonged' in that occupation.

To effectively recruit - you want to target the largest group of people. Or you may want to target specific groups with certain skills that you think will be a benefit to your umpire program.

Does your AD target the largest group of people? This tool will help to inform your AD.

This tool was inspired by a research paper written by Danielle Gaucher, Justin Friesen, and Aaron C. Kay back in 2011, called Evidence That Gendered Wording in Job Advertisements Exists and Sustains Gender Inequality (Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, July 2011, Vol 101(1), p109-28).

Finding subtle bias in job ads

Without realising it, we all use language that is subtly 'gender-coded'. Society has certain expectations of what men and women are like, and how they differ, and this seeps into the language we use. Think about "bossy" and "feisty": we almost never use these words to describe men.

This linguistic gender-coding shows up in job adverts as well, and research has shown that it puts women off applying for jobs that are advertised with masculine-coded language.*

This site is a quick way to check whether a job advert has the kind of subtle linguistic gender-coding that has this discouraging effect. Find out more about how this works.

In this ad, the pictures are great as they include various ages and genders.

However the text alone is male coded.

A few edits can make an ad even more effective in recruiting new umpires.

FAQ

This advert is masculine-coded

This job ad uses more words that are subtly coded as masculine than words that are subtly coded as feminine (according to the research). It risks putting women off applying, but will probably encourage men to apply.

Of course, there are plenty of other factors that affect the diversity of applicants for this role, and of the people who end up being hired. These include the company's reputation for inclusiveness, its culture, and the behaviour and prejudices (both conscious and unconscious) of the interviewers.

Umpires wanted for 2024!

We are looking for umpires for the upcoming 2024 Spring Season! Previous umpire experience is not required, we will train new umpires with knowledge of baseball or softball. All new candidates must be at least 13 years old and need to fill out an online application at <https://form.jotform.com/230157678822159>

The upcoming season starts late April/early May 2024 and training will begin mid April. Hours and pay vary based on which division each game is in. (Coach Pitch, Minor, Major, Junior or Senior)

One of our board members will contact all new candidates within the next few weeks.

Previous YNLL umpires that are interested in returning, please send an email to be added to the communication list.

This is a seasonal position that starts late April/early May and ends in June. (With the possibility of umpiring post season tournament games)

Email socialmedia@ypsinaional.org with further questions. No phone calls please.

In this ad, it only shows one picture of a male umpire.

However the text is neutrally coded, which is positive.

A few edits can make an ad even more effective in recruiting new umpires.

This advert is neutral

This job ad doesn't use any words that are subtly coded as masculine or feminine (according to the research). It probably won't be off-putting to men or women applicants.

Of course, there are plenty of other factors that affect the diversity of applicants for this role, and of the people who end up being hired. These include the company's reputation for inclusiveness, its culture, and the behaviour and prejudices (both conscious and unconscious) of the interviewers.
